

REQUEST FOR PERMISSION TO HOLD AN INTERESTED PARTIES MEETING TO CONSIDER AMENDING CALIFORNIA CODE OF REGULATIONS, TITLE 18, SECTION 25136, REGARDING THE ASSIGNMENT OF SALES OF OTHER THAN
TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY BY REFERENCE TO ACTIVITIES PERFORMED ON BEHALF OF A TAXPAYER, AND, IF NO OBJECTIONS ARE RAISED, TO PROCEED TO THE FORMAL REGULATORY PROCESS

At the Annual Meeting of the Multistate Tax Commission (the Commission) held on August 2, 2007, the Commission approved amendments to MTC Regulation IV.17. California Code of Regulations, title 18, section 25136, is based upon, and is virtually identical to, MTC Regulation IV.17 prior to the most recent amendments. Staff requests permission to hold an interested parties meeting to discuss whether the Franchise Tax Board should amend its existing regulation to conform to the changes made by the amendments to the Commission's model regulation.

If no new objections or comments are received with respect to the Franchise Tax Board adopting amendments to the current regulation to conform, or to substantially conform, to the amendments made by the Commission to their model regulation, staff also requests permission from the Board to initiate the formal regulatory process with respect to those amendments.

Background

Regulation section 25136 generally provides that sales of other than tangible property are assigned to the numerator of the sales factor based upon where the income producing activity is performed. Under subsection (b) of the current regulation, income producing activity only includes "activity directly engaged in by the taxpayer in the regular course of its trade or business" and "does not include transactions and activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer, such as those conducted on its behalf by an independent contractor."

Description of Amendments Adopted by the Multistate Tax Commission

The amendments adopted by the Commission reverse this rule and make assignments based upon activities of both the taxpayer and those performed on behalf of the taxpayer. This change is accomplished through a series of amendments. Two of the amendments strike the word "directly" and the words "does not" from the language quoted above. Another of the amendments adds additional language, subsection (4)(C), to the model regulation setting forth rules for determining the state where activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer are to be assigned. A copy of the amendments adopted by the Commission, with deletions in strikeout and additions in underscore, are attached hereto as Exhibit A.

Comments were submitted by Kimberley Reeder and Bo Kim of Baker & McKenzie LLP to the Multistate Tax Commission Hearing Officer. A copy of the comments submitted by Baker & McKenzie and the report of the Commission's Hearing Officer are attached as Exhibits B and C, respectively.

Regarding Treatment of Activities Performed "On Behalf Of" the Taxpayer

As Approved for By-law 7 survey by Executive Committee, November 2006

November 2006

•• Reg. IV.17. Sales Factor: Sales Other Than Sales of Tangible Personal Property in This State

(1) In general. Article IV.17. provides for the inclusion in the numerator of the sales factor of gross receipts from transactions other than sales of tangible personal property (including transactions with the United States Government); under this section, gross receipts are attributed to this state if the income producing activity which gave rise to the receipts is performed wholly within this state. Also, gross receipts are attributed to this state if, with respect to a particular item of income, the income producing activity is performed within and without this state but the greater proportion of the income producing activity is performed in this state, based on costs of performance.

(2) Income producing activity: defined. The term "income producing activity" applies to each separate item of income and means the transactions and activity directly engaged in by the taxpayer in the regular course of its trade or business for the ultimate purpose of producing that item of income ~~obtaining gains or profit~~. Such activity ~~does not~~ includes transactions and activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer, such as those conducted on its behalf by an independent contractor. Accordingly, income producing activity includes but is not limited to the following:

- (A) The rendering of personal services by employees or by an agent or independent contractor acting on behalf of the taxpayer or the utilization of tangible and intangible property by the taxpayer or by an agent or independent contractor acting on behalf of the taxpayer in performing a service.
- (B) The sale, rental, leasing, licensing or other use of real property.
- (C) The rental, leasing, licensing or other use of tangible personal property.
- (D) The sale, licensing or other use of intangible personal property.

The mere holding of intangible personal property is not, of itself, an income producing activity.

(3) Cost of performance: defined. The term "costs of performance" means direct costs determined in a manner consistent with generally accepted accounting principles and in accordance with accepted conditions or practices in the trade or business of the taxpayer to perform the income producing activity which gives rise to the particular item of income. Included in the taxpayer's cost of performance are taxpayer's payments to an agent or independent contractor for the performance of personal services and utilization of tangible and intangible property which give rise to the particular item of income.

(4) Application.

(A) In general. Receipts (other than from sales of tangible personal property) in respect to a particular income producing activity are in this state if:

(a) the income producing activity is performed wholly within this state; or

(b) the income producing activity is performed both in and outside this state and a greater proportion of the income producing activity is performed in this state than in any other state, based on costs of performance.

(B) Special rules. The following are special rules for determining when receipts from the income producing activities described below are in this state:

(a) Gross receipts from the sale, lease, rental or licensing of real property are in this state if the real property is located in this state.

(b) Gross receipts from the rental, lease, or licensing of tangible personal property are in this state if the property is located in this state. The rental, lease, licensing or other use of tangible personal property in this state is a separate income producing activity from the rental, lease, licensing or other use of the same property while located in another state; consequently, if property is within and without this state during the rental, lease or licensing period, gross receipts attributable to this state shall be measured by the ratio which the time the property was physically present or was used in this state bears to the total time or use of the property everywhere during that period.

Example: Taxpayer is the owner of 10 railroad cars. During the year, the total of the days during which each railroad car was present in this state was 50 days. The receipts attributable to the use of each of the railroad cars in this state are a separate item of income and shall be determined as follows:

$$\frac{(10 \times 50)}{3650} \times \text{Total Receipts} = \text{Receipts Attributable to this State}$$

(c) Gross receipts for the performance of personal services are attributable to this state to the extent that such services are performed in this state. If services relating to a single item of income are performed partly within and partly without this state, the gross receipts from the performance of such services shall be attributable to this state only if the greater proportion of the services was performed in the state, based on costs of performance. Usually, where services are performed partly within and partly without this state, the services performed in each state will constitute a separate income producing activity; in such cases, the gross receipts from the performance of services attributable to this state shall be measured by the ratio which the time spent in performing the services in this state bears to the total time spent in performing the services everywhere. Time spent in performing services includes the amount of time expended in the performance of a contract or other obligation which gives rise to such gross receipts. Personal service not directly connected with the performance of the contract or other obligation, as for example time expended in negotiating the contract, is excluded from the computations.

Example (i): Taxpayer, a road show, gave theatrical performances at various locations in State X and in this state during the tax period. All gross receipts from performances given in this state are attributed to this state.

Example (ii): The taxpayer, a public opinion survey corporation, conducted a poll by means of its employees in State X and in this state for the sum of $9,000. The project required 600 man-hours to obtain the basic data and prepare the survey report. Two hundred of the 600 man-hours were expended in this state. The receipts attributable to this state are $3,000.

$$\frac{200}{600} \times $9,000 = $3,000$$

(C) Services on Behalf of Taxpayer. An income producing activity performed on behalf of a taxpayer by an agent or independent contractor is attributed to this state if such income producing activity is in this state.

(a) Such income producing activity is in this state:

(i) when the taxpayer can reasonably determine at the time of filing that the income producing activity is actually performed in this state by the agent or independent contractor, but if the activity occurs in more than one state, the location where the income producing activity is actually performed shall be deemed to be not reasonably determinable at the time of filing under (4)(C)(a)(i);

(ii) if the taxpayer cannot reasonably determine at the time of filing where the income producing activity is actually performed, when the contract between the taxpayer and the agent or independent contractor indicates it is to be performed in this state and the portion of the taxpayer's payment to the agent or contractor associated with such performance is determinable under the contract;

(iii) if it cannot be determined where the income producing activity is actually performed and the agent or independent contractor's contract with the taxpayer does not indicate where it is to be performed, when the contract between the taxpayer and the taxpayer's customer indicates it is to be performed in this state and the portion of the taxpayer's payment to the agent or contractor associated with such performance is determinable under the contract; or

(iv) if it cannot be determined where the income producing activity is actually performed and neither contract indicates where it is to be performed or the portion of the payment associated with such performance, when the domicile of the taxpayer's customer is in this state. If the taxpayer's customer is not an individual, "domicile" means commercial domicile.

(b) If the location of the income producing activity by an agent or independent contractor, or the portion of the payment associated with such performance, cannot be determined under (4)(C)(a)(i) through (4)(C)(a)(iii), or the taxpayer's customer's domicile cannot be determined under (4)(C)(a)(iv), or, although determinable, such income producing activity is in a state in which the taxpayer is not taxable, such income producing activity shall be disregarded

Comments on Multistate Tax Commission's Proposed Amendment to MTC Regulation IV.17 Regarding Treatment of Activities Performed "On Behalf Of" the Taxpayer

By Kimberley Reeder and Bo Kim Baker & McKenzie LLP

We submit the following comments to the Multistate Tax Commission ("MTC"), in response to the invitation of the MTC following publication of the May 11, 2006 draft of the Proposed Amendment to MTC Model Regulation IV.17 to Include Services Performed on Behalf of the Taxpayer (the "Amendment") (as approved by the MTC Executive Committee for Public Hearing). The Amendment has been proposed to include in the definition of "income producing activity," the identification of which is necessary for sourcing gross receipts from sales other than sales of tangible personal property, those activities performed "on behalf of" the taxpayer. Changes are also proposed to the definition of "costs of performance" and a new section is added to provided additional guidance on services provided to a taxpayer.

I. General Concern

As a general comment, including On Behalf Of Activities in the definition of "income producing activity" creates an additional compliance burden for taxpayers. Very obviously, broadening the definition of "income producing activity" to include those activities performed by an independent contractor or agent will increase the number of activities that taxpayers will be required to track. Further, to the extent that "item of income" is intended to mean streams of income (see below), it will be administratively difficult to source individual receipts based on the costs specific to each receipt or income stream.

II. Concerns Specific to the Amendment

A. Deleting the Word "Directly" Goes Beyond the Apparent Purpose of the Amendment

As reflected in the title of the Amendment, its purpose is to broaden the scope of the terms "income producing activity" and "costs of performance" to include activities performed "on behalf of" a taxpayer, such as those activities performed by an independent contractor (referred to in these comments as "On Behalf Of Activities"). However, deleting the word "directly" from the phrase "the transactions and activity [directly] engaged in by the taxpayer in the regular course of its trade or business," goes beyond this stated purpose.

Perhaps the intent of this deletion is to remove any conflict that might exist between the requirement that a taxpayer directly engage in an activity and the Amendment's inclusion of On Behalf Of Activities in the definition of income producing activity. However, the impact of this deletion goes well beyond this intent. That is, by removing the word “directly,” the regulation now implies that any indirect activities, and not only On Behalf Of Activities, must be taken into account as an income producing activity. This change substantially increases the scope of what will be considered an income producing activity.

B. Addition of More References to an “Item of Income” Necessitates a Definition for this Term

As written, MTC Regulation IV.17 contains various references to an “item of income.” In fact, the term is utilized in an example (See Section (4)(B)(b)), providing some guidance on its meaning. However, the Amendment adds three additional references to the term. Importantly, the three new references are included in critical sections of the Amendment: the definitions of “income producing activity” and “costs of performance.” Despite increased references to “item of income,” the Amendment does not provide a definition or any further guidance as to what constitutes an “item of income.” The Amendment should address whether an “item of income” refers to each receipt based on invoice, each receipt based on type of services, or each receipt based on some other criterion.

C. Clarify Whether On Behalf Of Activities Are Limited to Personal Services

The Amendment’s illustrative list of income producing activities specifically provides that personal services performed by an agent/independent contractor on behalf of the taxpayer will be considered an income producing activity of the taxpayer. In addition, cost of performance includes “taxpayer’s payments to an agent or independent contractor for the performance of personal services which give rise to the particular item of income.” (Emphasis added.) The term “personal services” is also used in the current Section (4)(B). However, the newly-added Section (4)(C) uses only the term “services.” Taken together, these references appears to indicate that On Behalf of Activities may be limited to personal services. The Amendment should clarify whether this inference is appropriate.

D. An Income Producing Activity Should Be Attributed to the State Where the Service was Actually Performed

Section (4)(C)(a)(i) of the Amendment provides that “income producing activity is in this state:”

when the taxpayer can reasonably determine at the time of filing that the income producing activity is actually performed in this state by the agent or independent contractor, but if the activity occurs in more than one state, the location where the income producing activity is actually performed shall be deemed to be not reasonably determined at the time of filing under (4)(C)(a)(i).

This provision unnecessarily limits the taxpayer’s ability to source receipts to the state where a service is actually performed. It effectively prohibits taxpayers from attributing the performance of services to the place where a service actually was performed any time a contractor performs services in more than one state, even where the taxpayer can reasonably determine the true location of performance. That is, if a contractor performs services on behalf of taxpayer in several states, the taxpayer is forced to attribute the income producing activity to the customer's domicile if neither the contracts with the agent/independent contractor nor the contracts with the customer indicates a state of performance (under Sections (4)(C)(a)(ii) - (iv)). If the objective of the Amendment is to provide rules that would more accurately account for the taxpayer's income producing activity, the taxpayer should have an option to attribute such activities to the state where the service was actually performed even if the income producing activity occurs in more than one state.

The unfairness of this result is most apparent in the context of related parties. That is, where services are performed by a related party, the taxpayer is quite likely to know the actual place where services are performed, even where these services are performed in multiple states. Even so, Section (4)(C)(a)(i) does not address whether a service provider that is related to the taxpayer would be subject to the limitation discussed above.

The California Franchise Tax Board ("FTB") recently addressed whether acts performed on behalf of a taxpayer, including activities performed by a related party, should be considered an income producing activity for purposes of the sales factor.⁹ Like the current MTC Model Regulation IV.17, California Regulation section 25136(b) excludes from income producing activities "transactions and activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer." The FTB determined that services provided by a subcontractor on behalf of a contractor should be included in the contractor's income producing activity when the contractor and subcontractor are members of the same combined reporting group. As relevant to the current discussion, the FTB provided the following reasons for reaching its decision:

Treating a member of the combined reporting group as an independent contractor could tend to concentrate receipts into states where third party contracting decisions are made, regardless of where costs were incurred in performing the service. Moreover, such an approach may not reflect any of the benefits and protections accorded to the activities by the state or states where the activities are performed and does not reasonably reflect the business activities of the enterprise in this state.

As such, the FTB legal ruling provides that "for purposes of geographically determining where the greater costs of performance occur, [the rule] assigns the receipt to the state where the subcontractor actually performs the service on behalf of the contractor." This same logic supports permitting a taxpayer to attribute an income producing activity to the state where it is actually performed, if such location can be reasonably determined.

D. Income Producing Activity Performed in a State in Which the Taxpayer is Not Taxable Should Not be Disregarded

Section (4)(C)(b) provides that if income producing activity performed by an agent or independent contractor, although determinable, "is in a state in which the taxpayer is not taxable, such income producing activity shall be disregarded." This provision (the “throwout rule”) prevents taxpayers from taking into account all costs of performance to determine to which state an item of income should be sourced. Given that there is no comparable throwout rule for sales of tangible personal property to states in which the taxpayer is not taxable, the Amendment treats taxpayers deriving receipts from providing services differently from taxpayers deriving receipts from selling tangible personal property and, further, raises constitutional concerns.

Report of the Hearing Officer
Regarding Proposed Amendment to Multistate Tax Commission Regulation IV.17

November 2006

I. Introduction

In May, 2006, the Multistate Tax Commission (MTC) Executive Committee approved for public hearing a proposal to amend MTC Regulation IV.17. This regulation addresses Article IV, §17 of the Multistate Tax Compact. Among many other things, this section of the Compact states that if a taxpayer has a receipt from a transaction other than a sale of tangible personal property, that receipt is assigned to the numerator of the sales factor of the state where the income producing activity is located. Under the current regulation, income producing activity “does not include the transactions and activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer, such as those conducted by independent contractors.” The proposed amendment would eliminate that exclusion.

The appointed hearing officer held the public hearing and received one written comment and one oral comment. This Report covers the proposal’s procedural and substantive background, summarizes the proposal and the public comment received at hearing, and recommends adoption of the proposal with one modification (Exhibit A).

The proposal is now before the Executive Committee. The Committee may approve the proposal, with or without modifications, remand the proposal to an earlier stage of the process for further development, or reject the proposal. If the proposal is approved, it will be submitted to a bylaw 7 survey of Compact member states. The bylaw 7 survey asks whether the state would consider adopting the proposal in its jurisdiction. If a majority of Compact member states respond in the affirmative, the proposal will be submitted to a vote of the Commission.

II. Procedural Background

A. Development of the Proposal

An amendment to MTC Reg. IV.17. was first proposed at the November, 2004 Uniformity Committee meetings by the Committee’s representative from California (Mr. Michael Brownell, California- FTB). At that meeting, the Committee expressed interest in the proposal, and asked that a white paper be prepared explaining the rationale for such an amendment. A white paper was drafted by Mr. Brownell and presented to the Income & Franchise Tax Uniformity Subcommittee at its March, 2005 meetings, and, after discussion and an opportunity for public comment, the Subcommittee voted to initiate a uniformity project to address the proposal. On July 24, 2005, the white paper was again presented to the Income & Franchise Tax Uniformity Subcommittee, along with a draft proposed amendment. After discussion and an opportunity for public comment, the Committee voted to recommend the proposed amendment favorably to the Uniformity Committee. On July 25, 2005, after further discussion and opportunity for public comment, the full Uniformity Committee voted to recommend the proposal to the Executive Committee for public hearing.

At its meeting on July 27, 2005, the Executive Committee remanded the proposal to the Uniformity Committee in order to ensure adequate input from both member states and the public. The Committee directed the proposal be given additional consideration, via teleconference, and brought back to the Committee at its November, 2005 meetings.

The Income & Franchise Tax Uniformity Subcommittee met via teleconference to further consider the proposal on September 20, 2005 and October 18, 2005. At those teleconference meetings, the Subcommittee received additional input both from member states and the business community. A small drafting group consisting of two members of the Uniformity Subcommittee (Mr. Carl Joseph, California – FTB; Ms. Andrea Chang, California-FTB) and MTC staff was formed to incorporate changes to the draft based on the additional input. On November 6, 2005, the Income & Franchise Tax Uniformity Committee met again to consider the redrafted proposal and take public input. Another small work group consisting of two members of the Uniformity Subcommittee (Ms. Leonore Heavey, Louisiana; Mr. Carl Joseph, California – FTB) and MTC staff incorporated additional changes based on the input received. On November 7, 2005, the Subcommittee again considered the proposal and offered another opportunity for public input. After further discussion and changes to the proposal, the Subcommittee voted to recommend the proposal favorably to the full Uniformity Committee. On November 7, 2005, the full Uniformity Committee voted to recommend the proposal favorably to the Executive Committee for public hearing.

On November 10, 2005, the revised proposal came before the Executive Committee for possible approval for public hearing. After Committee review and discussion, and another opportunity for public input, the Committee determined discussion should be continued at its next meeting, scheduled for January 5, 2006. Following the Executive Committee's November meeting, a small group of Uniformity Committee members (Mr. Ted Spangler, Idaho; Mr. Carl Joseph and Ms. Andrea Chang, California – FTB) and MTC staff drafted additional amendments to the Uniformity Committee proposal that would address comments made by Executive Committee members at the November 2005 meeting. The January 2005 Executive Committee meeting was cancelled, and the proposal was placed on the Agenda for the next scheduled Executive Committee meeting, May 10, 2006. At this May meeting, the Executive Committee approved the proposal for public hearing.

B. Public Hearing

After 30 days notice, a Public Hearing was held October 26, 2006 in Washington, D.C. Oral public comments were received from Diann Smith, Council on State Taxation and written comments were submitted by Kimberley Reeder and Bo Kim for Baker & McKenzie LLP (Exhibit B).

III. Substantive Background

Under the Multistate Tax Compact (Compact), a multistate company's business income is apportioned among the states in which it does business in accordance with a three factor apportionment formula.¹ The three factors are property, payroll and sales.² The sales factor for each state is defined as a fraction, the numerator of which is equal to gross receipts attributable to that state, and the denominator of which is equal to total gross receipts.³ The amount of gross receipts attributable to a state is determined in one of two ways, depending on whether or not the business income to be apportioned arises from a sale of tangible personal property. If the business income does not arise from the sale of tangible personal property (i.e. it arises from the sale of services or intangibles, or the lease of tangible or intangible property), then the gross receipts from that transaction are attributable to that state if the "income producing activity" which gave rise to the receipts is in that state.⁴ If the income producing activity takes place in more than one state, then the receipts are attributed to the state with the greater income producing activity, based on the "cost of performance."

The Multistate Tax Commission is charged with the responsibility to develop model regulations interpreting the terms of the Compact.⁵ In 1972, MTC Model Regulation IV.17 was adopted to interpret the terms "income producing activity" and "cost of performance." Under MTC Reg.IV.17(2), income producing activity "applies to each separate item of income and means the transactions and activities directly engaged in by the taxpayer in the regular course of its trade or business for the ultimate purpose of obtaining gains or profit." The regulation further states that income producing activity "does not include the transactions and activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer, such as those conducted by independent contractors." It is common for a taxpayer that contracts to perform a service to delegate or subcontract a portion, and sometimes all, of the actual performance of the contract to a third party. However, under this rule, any portion of taxpayer's activity which has been so delegated is excluded from the calculation of taxpayer's "income producing activity." A cost paid to an entity that performs all or part of the service on the taxpayer's behalf is not considered part of taxpayer's cost of performance for purposes of determining where the receipt from that service will be attributed in calculating taxpayer's sales factor numerator.

To illustrate: Assume a taxpayer contracts with a customer to perform a service for $1 million, and hires a subcontractor that performs the service on the taxpayer's behalf in state B. Assume that the taxpayer will incur costs of its own in State A of $100,000, and will pay $500,000 to the subcontractor to perform the rest of the service in State B. If the costs paid to the subcontractor acting on behalf of the taxpayer are disregarded, the greater cost of performance ($100,000) is located in State A, and the $1 million sale would be in numerator of the State A sales factor. If the costs paid to the subcontractor acting on behalf of the taxpayer were considered, the greater cost of performance ($500,000 of $600,000) would be located in State B and the $1,000,000 sale would be in the numerator of the State B sales factor.

IV. Concerns with the Current Regulatory Language

A. Application Vague

The scope of the “on behalf of” actors whose activities may be disregarded is not clear. There is a range of possible actors that include 1) employees, 2) members of a combined reporting group, 3) members of a unitary group not included in the combined group, 4) affiliated but not unitary corporations, 4) individuals or corporations acting as agents,⁶ and 5) individuals or corporations acting as independent contractors.

While an employee in some sense acts “on behalf of” the corporation for which he or she is employed, a strong argument can be made that the employee should be considered an extension of the taxpayer itself, and the employee’s salary should not be disregarded as a cost of performance under the “on behalf of” rule.⁷ Next in the range of “on behalf of” actors is a member of the taxpayer’s combined reporting group. In a Finnigan state, the whole of the unitary enterprise is a “taxpayer” for apportionment purposes so it may be expected that acts by one unitary member “on behalf of” another would be treated as acts of component parts of the same “taxpayer.” In a Joyce state, however, for purposes of the numerator of the sales factor, each “taxpayer” member of a combined reporting group is considered a distinct entity, and one could argue the activity performed on behalf of the taxpayer by a subcontracting member of the combined group, and intercompany payments to that member, are not “income producing activities” of the prime contractor taxpayer that actually receives the receipt from its customer.

One could argue that the “on behalf of” rule should be limited to independent contractors. However, such an interpretation could arguably be inconsistent with language of the rule itself, which applies to those acting on behalf of a taxpayer “such as” independent contractors. The phrase “such as” implies that the scope of the “on behalf of” rule may be broader than independent contractors alone. Thus, activity performed and costs paid to a non-independent contractor agent (i.e., an agent under the control and supervision of its principal) might also be excluded from income producing activity and costs of performance under the “on behalf of” rule.

B. Potential for Manipulation

If non-independent (or dependent) contractors are within the scope of the “on behalf of” actors, a taxpayer would have a substantial planning opportunity. This opportunity arises because the taxpayer could essentially control the location of the numerator state by choosing to either perform the contract itself (in the example above, by performing the service itself in State B) or to hire an affiliate, possibly even a member of its combined group, to perform the contract (and thus, in the example above, shift the receipts to State A). A taxpayer wishing to exclude its cost of performance in a particular state could simply separately incorporate the segment of its business being performed in that state. State Departments of Revenue have begun to receive inquiries regarding whether or not this result from separate incorporation is indeed possible. Under the current rule, it appears it might be.⁸

⁶ For purposes of this discussion, an agent is a person or entity sufficiently acting under the control and supervision of a principal so as not to be considered an “independent contractor.”

C. Potentially Inadequate Statutory Support

Of interest to this inquiry, in General Motors Corp. v. Commonwealth [(Record No. 032533) (September 17, 2004) (Doc 2004-18598)] the Virginia Supreme Court held that third party costs should not have been disregarded in that state's cost of performance factor used for financial institutions. Virginia statute requires that the "taxable income of a financial corporation...shall be apportioned within and without this Commonwealth in the ratio that the business within this Commonwealth is to the total business of the corporation. Business within this Commonwealth shall be based on cost of performance in the Commonwealth over cost of performance everywhere." Virginia regulations defined the term "cost of performance" as used in the Virginia statute as "the costs of all activities directly performed by the taxpayer for the ultimate purpose of obtaining gains or profit." The regulation also provided that cost of performance did not include "activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer, such as those performed on its behalf by an independent contractor." The court found nothing in the language of the Virginia statute that limited the costs of performance to direct costs or anything to suggest that the department was permitted to exclude costs incurred for activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer by a third party.

There are certainly differences between the language of the Compact and the Virginia statute. Under Art.IV.17 of the Compact:

Sales, other than sales of tangible personal property, are in this State if:(a) the income-producing activity is performed in this State; or (b) the income-producing activity is performed both in and outside this State and a greater proportion of the income-producing activity is performed in this State than in any other State, based on costs of performance.

And, under the MTC regs, "on behalf of" activity is excluded from income producing activity, rather than from the cost of performance. But the two statutes may not be different in any way that is relevant to the issue here. Under the Virginia statute, the apportionment factor is "cost of performance." Under the Compact, the apportionment factor is "income producing activity," but cost of performance is the means for quantifying the relative significance of the income producing activity in one state versus another. The Compact uses the term "income producing activity" as a kind of intermediate concept, rather than the bottom line apportionment factor, but ultimately apportionment still depends on the relative cost of performance.

⁸ Of course, a separately incorporated entity operating in State B would have its own tax liability in State B and would attribute its own intercompany receipts to State B. However, this attribution would not produce the same result as if the taxpayer had performed the contract itself in State B. Even if the transaction is at arm's length, there would be a mark-up between what the subcontractor in state B charged its customer, the prime contractor in State A, and what the prime contractor charges the ultimate customer. This mark-up will not be reflected in the income sourced to state B. If the transaction is not at arm's length, the discrepancy could be much greater.

Of course this decision is precedential only in Virginia. But it does point out a possible weakness in the current regulation.

D. Rationale for Rule Unclear

The origins of the “on behalf of” rule are unclear. There may be a hint of a rationale in the fact that amounts paid to independent contractors are also excluded from the payroll factor. These rules may have reflected a notion that acts of an independent contractor were remote from the acts of the taxpayer and thus not properly chargeable to the taxpayer. This would be consistent with the cases that pre-date Scripto v. Carson that adopted a principle that acts of an independent contractor were not acts of the party for whom they acted. Section 17 doesn't have a throwback rule, so if a cost of performance is incurred in a state where the taxpayer doesn't have nexus, there is no standard mechanism in that statute or regulation for preventing a “nowhere sale.” On the other hand, the view that an independent contractor doesn't confer nexus on the out-of-state seller was rejected in Scripto, at least in the context of a sales solicitation. Scripto was a 1959 case, decided well before the regulation was completed in 1972. However, if the independent contractor (or the independent contractor's own subcontractor) has discretion as to where its portion of the contract is performed, it is possible that Scripto v. Carson would not impute nexus to the taxpayer in the state where the subcontractor services are performed, on a theory that the acts in that state were not “purposefully directed” by the taxpayer. In that case, if amounts paid to an independent contractor would be considered a cost of performance, it would still be possible to have the greater cost of performance located in a state where the taxpayer does not have nexus.

Another reason the “on behalf of” rule might have been adopted is to avoid the audit difficulties associated with determining the location where the “on behalf of” actor actually performed its portion of the services under the contract. However, if the prime contract with the taxpayer's customer calls for the performance of a service in a specific state, or the service can only be done in that state (e.g., an earth-moving contract), it is not that difficult to identify the location where the “on behalf of” actor actually performed the service. On the other hand, the “on behalf of” actor might have discretion as to where its portion of the service is to be performed. For example, if a subcontractor is adding component value to an advertising contract, it might be able to perform its subcontracting services anywhere. In still other cases, a subcontractor might “outsource” its subcontracting services to still another party. As the actors become increasingly more remote from the prime contracting party, identification of the location of costs of performance could become increasingly difficult.

Any reversal of the “on behalf of” exclusion can and should address these two possible rationales for the current rule.

V. Summary of Proposed Amendment

A. Include Cost of Activity Performed “On Behalf Of” Taxpayer

The proposal from the Uniformity Committee would strike the exclusion of activity performed on behalf of the taxpayer from the definition of “income producing activity.” Instead, the definition would include all of taxpayer's activity, regardless of whether it is performed by the taxpayer itself or by another entity acting on the taxpayer's behalf. The proposal would include the activity of all third party contractors, both dependent and independent. Treating all contractors similarly will avoid creating tax incentives or disincentives for taxpayers to contract with one over the other.

B. Address Potential Lack of Information Re Location of Activity

The proposal adopts a sequence of rules for determining the location of the taxpayer's income producing activity performed by a third party. Under the rule, the activity will be located where it actually takes place, if the taxpayer can make that determination. If the taxpayer cannot determine where the activity takes place, then the activity is sourced to the location specified by the contract between the taxpayer and the contractor, or if no such location is specified, then by the location specified for performance in the contract between the taxpayer and its customer. If neither contract specifies a location, then the activity is attributed to the location of the taxpayer's customer's (commercial) domicile.

C. Preclude "Look Through" to Subcontractor's COP

The purpose of the rule is to determine the location of the taxpayer's income producing activity, not the subcontractor's income producing activity. The taxpayer's income producing activity may be quantified using the taxpayer's cost of performance, not the subcontractor's cost of performance. Therefore, the only cost relevant to an inquiry regarding performance by a third party acting on behalf of the taxpayer, are the taxpayer's costs associated with that performance – the payments made by the taxpayer under the contract between the taxpayer and the subcontractor. In fact, taxpayer's payments to a subcontractor are "direct" costs to the taxpayer for the performance of the service being provided to taxpayer's customer. The costs should not include indirect costs such as the subcontractors cost of performing the service for its customer (the taxpayer). Nor should cost of performance include the costs of taxpayer activities that are not "directly engaged in ...for the ultimate purpose of obtaining gains or profit [i.e. of producing the item of income]," such as an assignment of costs for negotiating the contract with the subcontractor. This latter exclusion is consistent with the treatment of other direct costs, which include only the cost of taxpayer's personnel or property used to produce the item of income, and not the costs of negotiating the contract for that personnel or property.

D. Address Potential for Lack of Nexus

If the (commercial) domicile cannot be determined, or if the taxpayer does not have nexus in the state to which the rule would attribute the activity, then the activity is disregarded. The result is similar to a sales factor "throw-out" rule, although it only applies for purposes of determining the location of a particular receipt. It is not a throw-out of the receipt itself, which may still be attributed to some other state on the basis of the remaining costs – similarly to how the current rule would function.

VI. Public Comment and Hearing Officer Recommendations

The public hearing for this proposal was well attended, but only two sets of comments were received: Diann Smith (COST) testified orally, and Kimberley Reeder and Bo Kim (Baker & McKenzie LLP) submitted written comments. Exhibit A shows the hearing officer's recommendations for amendment in light of these public comments. The relatively low volume of public comment may reflect the fact that significant comment was received, and significant changes were made in light of that comment, during earlier stages of the uniformity process.

- Compliance Burden

Baker & McKenzie LLP suggested that including “on behalf of” activities in the definition of “income producing activity” creates an addition compliance burden by increasing the number of activities that taxpayers will be required to track. (B&M LLP, p. 1) It is true that additional information will require additional tracking, but the comments do not give an indication of the extent of the burden or suggest that the addition burden is not outweighed by the benefits of more reasonable sourcing. The lack of specificity on this point and the lack of input from other taxpayers, suggest that any increased administrative tracking will not be unduly burdensome in light of the benefits to be achieved. Therefore, the Hearing Office does not recommend a change.

- Activities Engaged in “Directly”

A question was raised as to whether deleting the term “directly” from the phrase “the transactions and activity ‘directly’ engaged in by the taxpayer in the regular course of its trade or business” goes beyond the purpose of the amendment to imply that any indirect activities must be taken into account as income producing activity. (B&M LLP, p.1-2) After considering the proposal as a whole, the Hearing Officer does not believe a change would be appropriate. A distinction should be made between activities in which the taxpayer is directly engaged and costs which the taxpayer directly incurs. The regulation continues to restrict included costs of performance to direct costs. The Taxpayer is engaging in activities indirectly through a contractor, but the included costs are limited to the direct payments the taxpayer makes to that contractor, i.e. the direct costs of the taxpayer. This retention of the requirement that any included costs must be direct costs of the taxpayer adequately limits the proposal to its intended scope.

- Definition of “Item of Income”

It was suggested that the term “Item of Income” should be defined (B&M LLP, p. 2). The Hearing Officer generally agrees with that suggestion, however such an amendment is outside the narrow scope of this particular project and would best be addressed, if necessary, through the Commission's larger project regarding revisions to the language of Section IVI.17 of the Compact itself.

- “On Behalf Of” Services, More Than Just Personal Services

Baker & McKenzie LLP suggested that the language seemed to limit the “on behalf of” services to only personal services. (B&M LLP, p.2) This was not intended and the Hearing Officer recommends a clarifying amendment to sections (2) and (3).

- Sourcing Income Producing Activity to State Where Actually Performed

The proposal provides that income producing activity is in this state:

“ ... when the taxpayer can reasonably determine at the time of filing that the income producing activity is actually performed in this state by the agent or independent contractor, but if the activity occurs in more than one state, the location where the income producing activity is actually performed shall be deemed to be not reasonably determinable at the time of filing under (4)(C)(a)(i)”

It was suggested that the provision unnecessarily limits the taxpayer’s ability to source receipts to the state where a service is actually performed when a contractor performs the service in more than one state. The proposal does limit ability to source in this manner, but that limitation is necessary in order to avoid requiring the taxpayer to “look through” its own direct costs of performance to the costs of performance of its contractors.

In determining taxpayer’s cost of performance, we would like to look at all of the taxpayer’s direct costs of performance in a particular state, including any payment to a subcontractor performing in that state. But if the subcontractor, in turn, is performing its activity on behalf of the taxpayer in more than one state, the taxpayer may not know in which state those activities are actually being performed. Even if the taxpayer does know the various locations of the subcontractor’s activity, there may be no clear cut way to determine the portion of its payment to the subcontractor (the taxpayer’s cost of performance) that is associated with the subcontractor’s activity in each state. Under the general rule, if the activity takes place in more than one state, you look to cost of performance. But we certainly do not want to create any need to “look through” to the subcontractors cost of performance (the subcontractors own costs of performing its contract with the taxpayer). We only want to look at the taxpayer’s cost of performance in fulfilling its contract with its customer, and not any costs incurred by a subcontractor in fulfilling its contract with the taxpayer.

If the taxpayer has a simple way of determining which portion of the subcontractors activity is taking place in each state, and which portion of it’s payments to the subcontractor is associated with the subcontractors activity in each state (e.g. a contract that breaks out the taxpayer’s payment responsibilities for activity performed in each state), then under the current language of the proposal, that information could be used in determining the taxpayer’s cost of performance in each state. Therefore, the Hearing Officer does not recommend further amendment.

- Throwout Rule

Both commenters, COST and Baker & McKenzie LLP, object to the use of a throwout rule. (B&M LLP, p. 5) Baker & McKenzie LLP argue that “given that there is no comparable throwout rule for sales of tangible personal property to states in which the taxpayer is not taxable, the amendment treats taxpayers deriving receipts from providing services differently from taxpayers deriving receipts from selling tangible personal property...” (B&M LLP, p 5) This is true. A throwback rule applies to taxpayers selling tangible personal property. This rule would apply a throwout rule under certain circumstances to the determination for sourcing receipts from other than sales of tangible personal property. Nonetheless, the Hearing Officer sees no reason why the two would have to be the same. There are many provisions in both the Compact and the Regulations that treat taxpayers deriving receipts from ...services differently from taxpayers deriving receipts from selling tangible personal property.” And, in fact, eliminating the throwout provision as suggested would still not result in the treatment being the same.

COST expressed concern that this type of throwout provision could create anomalies by sourcing receipts for otherwise similarly situated taxpayers to different states if one of the taxpayer did not have nexus in a particular state. This is indeed a negative result of throwout (and of throwback as well). However, without throwout, the result would be even more anomalous as the one taxpayer would avoid tax altogether on that portion of its income sourced to a state in which it doesn't have nexus. Throwout is a partial, though not complete, correction for that anomalous result. Thus, the Hearing Officer does not recommend deleting this provision.

§ 25136. Sales Factor. Sales Other than Sales of Tangible Personal Property in this State.

(a) In General. Section 25136 provides for the inclusion in the numerator of the sales factor of gross receipts from transactions other than sales of tangible personal property (including transactions with the United States Government); under this section, gross receipts are attributed to this state if the income-producing activity which gave rise to the receipts is performed wholly within this state. Also, gross receipts are attributed to this state if, with respect to a particular item of income, the income-producing activity is performed within and without this state but the greater proportion of the income-producing activity is performed in this state, based on costs of performance.

(b) Income-Producing Activity: Defined. The term "income-producing activity" applies to each separate item of income and means the transactions and activity directly engaged in by the taxpayer in the regular course of its trade or business for the ultimate purpose of producing that item of income ~~obtaining gains or profit~~. Such activity ~~does not include~~ transactions and activities performed on behalf of a taxpayer, such as those conducted on its behalf by an independent contractor. Accordingly, income-producing activity includes but is not limited to the following:

(1) The rendering of personal services by employees or by an agent or independent contractor acting on behalf of the taxpayer or the utilization of tangible and intangible property by the taxpayer or by an agent or independent contractor acting on behalf of the taxpayer in performing a service.

(2) The sale, rental, leasing, licensing or other use of real property.

(3) The rental, leasing, licensing or other use of tangible personal property.

(4) The sale, licensing or other use of intangible personal property.

The mere holding of intangible personal property is not, of itself, an income-producing activity

(c) Costs of Performance: Defined. The term "costs of performance" means direct costs determined in a manner consistent with generally accepted accounting principles and in accordance with accepted conditions or practices in the trade or business of the taxpayer to perform the income-producing activity which gives rise to the particular item of income. Included in the taxpayer's costs of performance are taxpayer's payments to an agent or independent contractor for the performance of personal services and utilization of tangible and intangible property which give rise to the particular item of income.

(d) Application.

(1) In General. Receipts (other than from sales of tangible personal property) in respect to a particular income-producing activity are in this state if:

(A) the income-producing activity is performed wholly within this state; or

(B) the income-producing activity is performed both in and outside this state and a greater proportion of the income-producing activity is performed in this state than in any other state, based on costs of performance.

(2) Special Rules. The following are special rules for determining when receipts from the income-producing activities described below are in this state:

(A) Gross receipts from the sale, lease, rental or licensing of real property are in this state if the real property is located in this state.

(B) Gross receipts from the rental, lease or licensing of tangible personal property are in this state if the property is located in this state. The rental, lease, licensing or other use of tangible personal property in this state is a separate income-producing activity from the rental, lease, licensing or other use of the same property while located in another state; consequently, if property is within and without this state during the rental, lease or licensing period, gross receipts attributable to this state shall be measured by the ratio which the time the property was physically present or was used in this state bears to the total time or use of the property everywhere during such period.

EXAMPLE:

Taxpayer is the owner of 10 railroad cars. During the year, the total of the days each railroad car was present in this state was 50 days. The receipts attributable to the use of each of the railroad cars in this state are a separate item of income and shall be determined as follows:

$$\begin{array}{r} (10 \times 50) \Rightarrow \\ \underline{500} \\ 3650 \end{array} \quad \times \text{ Total Receipts} = \text{Receipts Attributable to this State}$$

(C) Gross receipts for the performance of personal services are attributable to this state to the extent such services are performed in this state. If services relating to a single item of income are performed partly within and partly without this state, the gross receipts for the performance of such services shall be attributable to this state only if a greater portion of the services ~~were~~was performed in this state, based on costs of performance. Usually where services are performed partly within and partly without this state, the services performed in each state will constitute a separate income-producing activity; in such cases, the gross receipts ~~for~~from the performance of services attributable to this state shall be measured by the ratio which the time spent in performing such services in this state bears to the total time spent in performing such services everywhere. Time spent in performing services includes the amount of time expended in the performance of a contract or other obligation which gives rise to such gross receipts. Personal services not directly connected with the performance of the contract or other obligation, as for example, time expended in negotiating the contract, is excluded from the computations.

EXAMPLE (i):

Taxpayer, a road show, gave theatrical performances at various locations in State X and in this state during the tax period. All gross receipts from performances given in this state are attributed to this state.

EXAMPLE (ii):

The taxpayer, a public opinion survey corporation, conducted a poll by its employees in State X and in this state for a sum of $9,000. The project required 600 person hours to obtain the basic data and prepare the survey report. Two hundred of the 600 person hours were expended in this state. The receipts attributable to this state are $3,000.

$$\frac{(200 \text{ man-person hours} \times $9,000)}{600 \text{ man-person hours}}$$

(3) Services on Behalf of Taxpayer. An income-producing activity performed on behalf of a taxpayer by an agent or independent contractor is attributed to this state if such income-producing activity is in this state.

(A) Such income-producing activity is in this state:

(i) when the taxpayer can reasonably determine at the time of filing that the income-producing activity is actually performed in this state by the agent or independent contractor, but if the activity occurs in more than one state, the location where the income-producing activity is actually performed shall be deemed to be not reasonably determinable at the time of filing;

(ii) if the taxpayer cannot reasonably determine at the time where the income-producing activity is actually performed, when the contract between the taxpayer and the agent or independent contractor indicates it is to be performed in this state and the portion of the taxpayer's payment to the agent or independent contractor associated with such performance is determinable under the contract;

(iii) if it cannot be determined where the income-producing activity is actually performed and the agent or independent contractor's contract with the taxpayer does not indicate where it is to be performed, when the contract between the taxpayer and the taxpayer's customer indicates it is to be performed in this state and the portion of the taxpayer's payment to the agent or independent contractor associated with such performance is determinable under the contract; or,

(iv) if it cannot be determined where the income-producing activity is actually performed and neither contract indicates where it is to be performed or the portion of the payment associated with such performance, when the domicile of the taxpayer's customer is in this state. If the taxpayer's customer is not an individual, "domicile" means commercial domicile.

(B) If the location of the income-producing activity by an agent or independent contractor, or the portion of the payment associated with such performance, cannot be determined under subsection (d)(3)(A)(i) through (iii), or the taxpayer's customer's domicile cannot be determined under (d)(3)(A)(iv), or, although determinable, such income-producing activity is in a state in which the taxpayer is not taxable, such income-producing activity shall be disregarded.
